"While restaurants continue to feel the weight of the pandemic, retailers are still benefiting."

due to the coronavirus pandemic, according to the National Restaurant Association (NRA). The organization noted nearly 3 million employees remained out of work, and the industry is projected to lose billions in sales by the close of 2020.

It was also found that

"consumer spending in restaurants were down 34% on average."

"Forty percent of operators surveyed think it is unlikely their restaurant will still be in business six months from now" if there are no additional relief packages from the federal government.

71% of what they would typically see below normal levels in August and, overall, sales were down 34% on average.

For an industry reliant on service and hospitality, the last six months have been a challenge for our business," said Tom Bené, NRA president and CEO. "Our survival depends on the creativity and entrepreneurship of owners, operators, and employees. Across the board, from owners to multi-unit franchise operators, restaurants are losing money even as they struggle to serve their communities and support their employees."
